THE POOR EVERY DAY

It is government policy to force unemployed people into mandatory unpaid work by threatening to take away their benefits. This puts the unemployed in a dangerous position where they can easily be exploited by large companies eager to cut overheads in order to maximise profits. Despite annual profits of close to £800,000,000 ASDA have jumped on the free-labour gravy train. Not only do they exploit the poorest members of society, they're also taking advantage of their own staff by sending paid workers home early and using workfare workers instead.
